ONLINE MARKETPLACE

Second-hand economy picks up steam as seasons change

Yvette d'Entremont Metro | Halifax

From floral couches and funky curtains to 40 foot shipping containers, Halifax-area residents are using Kijiji to furnish their homes, and possibly even to create them.

To mark Earth Month and the start of spring, Kijiji conducted what they called a "deep dive" into the unique aspects of the second-hand economy across

One of the areas they looked at was Halifax, where people frequently post free to a good home' ads and others designed to help people in their communities.

"What I think is really the most striking is probably the people who help each other... I live in Toronto and there are small pockets where you see that kind of community feel," McIntyre said.

"But not the way that you would see in Halifax and Dartmouth or Bedford and Sackville. There seems to be a large pocket of people looking out for each other out there.

With spring in the air, it's a sure bet people in Halifax are scouring Kijiji to seek and find items.

"Changes in season lead to spikes in popular categories," McIntyre said.

"This is the time of year you'll see more of that than ever."

For Halifax-area residents, home décor, furniture and home appliances are by far the most posted items.

The most replied to ad was a sale for 40 foot shipping containers, an item McIntyre said was unique to the Halifax marketplace.

"I think the uniqueness of that ad is what led to so many replies...We went through a lot of the replies and a lot of them were people asking how it would be transported,

what could be done with them," he said.

"When you look at issues around sustainability, people are even building homes with these shipping containers."

Although Halifax boasts one of the more popular and engaged sites in all regions served by Kijiji, McIntyre said the region is lagging nationally when it comes to other aspects of the secondhand economy. This includes

thrift stores.

"To hear the participation in general was still significantly lower, I think we can do better in Halifax," he said.

"We want to challenge Haligonians to look around and consider the second-hand economy when looking to purchase something."

Neptune changes Shrek musical after complaint

Transgender person upset by character's use of word

Halifax's leading theatre company says it has altered its production of Shrek: The Musical in response to a transgender person who walked out of a recent performance to protest an offensive word.

Ky Grey said he walked out of Neptune Theatre's opening night performance of the musical after the character of the Big Bad Wolf used the word "Tranny."

Grey, 20, who was at the March 29 performance with his mother, said the word followed several mocking references to the wolf character being a cross-dresser.

"That word was dropped and it's used as violence against trans-women specifically," he said. "But just in general it brings up a lot of bad emotions and feelings of transphobia in me and the community."

Grey said the word, which he can't bring himself to say, was upsetting, as was the reaction in the audience.

"Just the idea that this character who was supposed to be a man dressing in a dress and how funny that was, hearing kids laugh about it - it was all very overwhelming."

Grey said he stayed until intermission and then left the theatre.

He said he later complained to the theatre management and eventually met with general manager Amy Melmock to discuss his concerns this week.

Contacted about Grey's complaint, Neptune Theatre's director of sales and marketing, Jennie King, provided an emailed statement expressing its "active support" for the LGBTQ community.

"We were upset to learn that one of our productions created a feeling of distress among members of the LGBTQ community in Halifax and a change was immediately made to remove the offending word," the email states. "Neptune has spoken and met with these members of the LGBTQ community to understand and address their concerns."

Grey said the offensive term has been replaced by the word "hairy."

An avid theatre fan, Grey said he understands the company can only go so far with the material. "I understand that they have limits to what they can change based on the rights that they do or do not have to the show," he said.

Grey said he believes the issue goes beyond artistic license when there is an impact on people affected by what's portrayed, intended or not. THE CANADIAN PRESS

LGBTQ+ youth, elders collaborate

OUTREACH

Group hosts series of panels to connect generations

Nicole Gnazdowsky For Metro | Halifax

Rebecca Rose says LGBTQ+ people are some of the only individuals that are not necessarily born into a supportive community of people who are equally marginalized.

Rose is the board chair for the Nova Scotia Rainbow Action Project, an organization working to connect LGBTQ+ youth with the leadership and guidance they both seek and need.

"As an LGBTQ+ you don't usually find your elders until you're a little older, so we're looking to change that," says The NSRAP has been hosting an array of panels aimed at connecting younger LG-BTQ+ people with older members of the community. They hope the panels will serve to bridge the generational divide and have decided to film the conversations between these pairs to showcase the educational process.

"Elders and youth both learn from the process. Learning a lot about LGBT history and also just what's happening right now in the trans community," says Rose.

"They're all pretty heart warming, thought provoking, intergenerational discussions," Rose says.

The videos are themed around three LGBTQ+ issues: coming out, queer and trans spaces, and issues faced particularly by black and Mi'kmaq members of the community.

"In our community we are almost in danger of re-inventing the wheel. There are a lot of similarities between generations, but they learned a lot back then and if we're not in touch with our elders and not in conversation, we could risk making some of the mistakes that they did," Rose says.

The filmed conversations will be screened at the Halifax Central Library on Saturday from 3 p.m. until 4:30 p.m.

But for the first time since the shooting, Ashley can now lift her arms over her head, and move her hands and torso.

"Right now the goal is to get my core strong enough so I can sit myself up and move around a little bit," Ashley said at the Platypus Medical Exercise Therapy and Training centre in Windsor.

"Right now I can feel it in my sides; it's kind of hard to explain, it's like wearing a binder," she said.

Barrett sentenced to life, calls trial 'witch hunt'

While still proclaiming his innocence, a Glace Bay man was sentenced Wednesday to life in prison with no parole eligibility for 15 years after being convicted of second-degree murder.

Thomas Ted Barrett, 41, was convicted in March of murdering 19-year-old Brett Elizabeth Mc-Kinnon of Glace Bay, who was first reported missing in July 2006. Her skeletal remains were found near an abandoned landfill in 2008. Although an autopsy was unable to conclusively determine the cause of death, Supreme Court Justice Robin Gogan ruled McKinnon died after being strangled by Barrett, who accused the young woman of stealing drugs from him.

Gogan made the determination after presiding over a nineday trial during which she heard testimony from 18 Crown witnesses - represented by senior Crown prosecutors Kathryn Pentz and Diane McGrath - and two for the defence - represented by Brian Bailey. Barrett did not take the stand on his own behalf.

The conviction meant an automatic life sentence and Wednesday's hearing determined the amount of time he is to spend in a federal jail before becoming

The hearing also heard from five of McKinnon's family members, including her mother and brother, who read their victim impact statements in court.

In struggling to remain composed, Lynn Singleton, Mc-Kinnon's mother, described her daughter as being high spirited with strong opinions.

"She loved life, joking around, music, sports, fashion and she loved her brother, BJ."

Man accused of confining woman

Charges laid after alleged cabin lock-in incident

Zane Woodford Metro | Halifax

A Nova Scotia man has been charged with unlawful confinement after RCMP allege he locked a woman in a cabin.

Police say 30-year-old Justin Daniel MacLeod offered to drive a woman home after meeting her at a party on April 8, but instead of driving her home, he brought her to a "secluded area of Richmond County and locked her in his family's cabin."

The man then left and the woman escaped, then broke into a nearby cabin to hide before eventually fleeing the scene altogether. She was not injured.

Police got a call the next day from the owner of the cottage the woman had broken into to hide, reporting a break and enter.

They don't say how that led them to MacLeod, just that he was arrested over the weekend. He appeared in court Tuesday, charged with unlawful confinement and breach of conditions.

Justin Daniel MacLeod was released. He is due in court in Port Hawkesbury in May.

Child porn charges laid

A Hatchet Lake man is facing child pornography charges following a search of a home on April 8.

The RCMP say Benjamin Robert Boucher, 32, was arrested and charged with accessing child pornography and possession of child pornography. He was released on conditions and is scheduled to appear in Halifax provincial court May 30.

Pedestrian ticketed after hitting cube truck

A pedestrian has been ticketed after a collision in Halifax Wednesday. At 9:05 a.m., police were called to the 2800 block of Gottingen Street.

A cube truck was in the crossing waiting to turn when a 50-year-old man in an electric wheelchair entered the crosswalk, striking the back of the truck.

He was treated for non-life threatening injuries at the QEII Health Sciences Centre and released. He was issued a ticket for moving into the path of a vehicle when impractical for the vehicle to Stop. METRO

Nova Scotia hockey fans, take heart

Still plenty of players to cheer for in the NHL playoffs even without any Canadian teams to get behind

Kristen Lipscombe Metro | Halifax

So no Habs and no Leafs, eh? There may not be any Canadian teams in the running for the 2016 Stanley Cup, or even the Boston Bruins, but Nova Scotian hockey fans still have plenty to cheer for this post-season.

Just in time for puck drop on the 2016 NHL playoffs, Metro Halifax has compiled this list of some local Bluenosers or those with ties to Halifax that fans should watch for in the race for hockey's most coveted trophy.

So go ahead and jump right on that bandwagon:

Florida Panthers

Although he's not on their roster right now, Glace Bay native Logan Shaw, 23, spent some time in the regular season with the Florida Panthers, and could be called up again.

"He had a pretty big run with them," John Moore, the voice of the Halifax Mooseheads on 95.7, and a well-respected local hockey expert, said Wednesday.

Shaw contributed seven points in 53 games after being brought up from the American Hockey League.

Shaw will likely be one of the first calls Florida management will make if they need fill-ins up front. "He'll be on the top of the list."

Tampa Bay Lightning

All eyes will be on former Halifax Mooseheads forward and 2013 Memorial Cup champion Jonathan Drouin, who looks to prove himself after a shaky start to his NHL career, including a suspension this season after at first refusing to play for the AHL's Syracuse Crunch.

Drouin, 21, has since come around; he notched nine goals in 10 games with the Crunch and on the

to make a real impact. "One of the most interesting stories will be Jonathan Drouin's return to the Tampa Bay lineup," Moore said. Drouin only played six playoff games with Tampa Bay during his rookie season, but with ning's roster, with the chance several injuries to the Lightning lineup including captain Steven Stamkos, the flashy forward should see more ice.

"He'll be a player that Tampa will be looking to, to step to the forefront,"

Moore said. "And he wants to do that, based on what's happened this past year."

Also on the Tampa Bay roster is a lesser-known forward with local ties. Alex Killorn, 27, was born in Halifax but raised in Beaconsfield, Que. He has tallied 42 points for 138 points in 272 games played in four seasons with the Lightning.

"He had a remarkable year last year in the playoffs," Moore said. "He was a player that exceed expectations.

Grand Lake's Rick Bowness is also an associate coach with the team.

New York Islanders

This season may very well be a swan song for left winger

Eric Boulton. 39, of the New York Island-

The Sackville native was drafted 234th overall in the ninth round of the 1994 entry draft by the New York Rangers, but played for the Atlanta Thrashers, Buffalo Sabres and New Jersey Islanders before signing with the Islanders in 2012 as a free agent. "He plays that physical, tough, hard-nosed role," Moore explained. "Those guys are as important as ever in the playoffs, but I'm just not sure how much ice he'll (see)."

Philadelphia Flyers

There are a couple of players Nova Scotians will want to follow on the Philadelphia Flyers.

Blueliner Andrew MacDonald, 29, caused some trouble for Philly's salary cap earlier this season with his multimilliondollar contract, but he appears to be back on the NHL roster.

This year's playoffs could be MacDonald's chance to prove his value, Moore said.

"He's not a flashy-type defenceman," Moore said of the Judique native who laced up for the Moncton Wildcats of the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League. "He's a shot-blocking, intelligent defenceman that can shut down guys."

be looking for Jakub Vorkeep producing. The former Halifax Jakub Voracek Mooseheads forward from Kladno, Czech Republic, had 11 goals and 44 assists for 55 points to land in fourth for his team's regularseason scoring.

Up front,

Herd fans will

right-winger

acek, 26, to

Pittsburgh Penguins

Of course, there's also Sid the Kid. Despite a sluggish start to the season and the usual opposition calling him over-rated, Nova Scotians still love seeing the Pittsburgh Penguins captain Sidney Crosby, 27, make his home province proud, and many want nothing more than for him to bring Lord Stanley back home.

"He had that period where people were questioning, what's wrong with Sidney Crosby?" Moore said, adding Penguins management was quick to tell fans that "we're not as a team getting him the puck when he needs to have the puck; it's more about us than it is about him."

Washington Capitals

Also recalled from the AHL earlier this month is Truro native Zach Sill, 27, who will suit up for the Washington Capitals this post-season.

The former Moncton Wildcats forward signed a two-year contract with the Pittsburgh Penguins in 2011, but has

No Canada could be bad for business

Sarah Rae For Metro | Halifax

Without a single Canadian team to root for, Halifax sports bars could be hit in the pocketbooks for the upcoming 2016 NHL playoffs.

Puck drops on the post-sea-son Wednesday night. Midtown Tavern manager Bob Grant said he thinks fewer people will be watching in Nova Scotia and throughout Canada.

"Montreal seems to be a team that really brings people out, so that'll hurt things a bit," he said

He thinks fans will still support the Pittsburgh Penguins because of Sidney Crosby, but not being able to see Canadian teams such as the Toronto Maple Leafs or Montreal Canadiens, or local favourites such as the Boston Bruins, could affect business.

Oasis Pub manager Kelsey Amero said business would be "100 per cent" affected by the lack of Canadian teams.

He said other than the Penguins, there just aren't many popular teams in the playoffs this year, but the bar is trying to get sports lovers out to games by putting wings on sale.

Grant says what won't change is that there will always be an exciting series to watch, even without Canadian teams to root for, which means big groups doing playoff pools coming in as customers.

Jay Mayne started rapping during high school in his mom's kitchen.

Now with over 15 mixtapes, the 31-year-old hip-hop artist from Dartmouth has an opportunity to take his music career to the next level.

Three days ago, Mayne signed a one-year contract with Blingnot Media, an American distribution company responsible for facilitating the careers of artists like Lauryn Hill, The Fugees, Kris Kross and Flo Rida.

"It's definitely a piece to the puzzle," Mayne told Metro on Wednesday.

As a Canadian artist, it's often hard to get exposure in the United States, so he said the deal with Blingnot will help him achieve that.

"Anything to break into that market," he said. "Canada is stagnant waters."

"I'm just excited to be able to get out of the country with it."

On the South Common in Halifax, dressed head-to-toe in black, Mayne said as far as expression-wise, skateboarding and music are one and the same for him.

He said he works most from his home studio where he can wake up at 2:30 a.m. with an idea and lay it down without having to call anyone. "The less people involved, the easier it is to make things happen," he said.

He will be performing at the ECMAs in Sydney this Friday and Saturday and then heads south of the border.

As a passionate skateboarder, Mayne is looking forward to his performance in L.A., the skateboarding capital of the world.

Dying with Dignity talks competence

ASSISTED DEATH

Mentally ill, those at risk of dementia need access: Group

Nicole Gnazdowsky For Metro | Halifax

Dying with Dignity Canada wants to make sure the legislation surrounding assisted death will be applied fairly to patients of all ages and conditions.

The federal government is set to announce the legislation Thursday morning after considering 21 recommendations on the issue. Dying with Dignity Canada is particularly concerned about a few of these recommendations, and the Nova Scotia chapter wants to ensure people are well-informed before forming any firm opinions.

"I'm hoping once I explain these recommendations I can get people behind what they really mean," said Sheila Sperry, head of the Nova Scotia chapter.

They will hold a discussion panel Thursday from 6:30 p.m. until 8:30 p.m. at Dartmouth's Alderney Library.

Two of the issues Sperry wants to focus on include rights for people with mental-health issues and advanced care for dementia patients.

Sperry believes that people with mental-health issues are fully competent individuals who should be able to decide whether or not assisted death is right for them, as anyone with any other illness will be able to.

"There would be two problems that could arise if we deny people with mental illnesses this right," Sperry said.

"First, it's another stigma against people with mental illness. We're saying that there's something wrong with you; it's not that you're ill. Second, we're setting ourselves up for a court challenge because we are taking a right away from someone."

The group also wants to make sure that if you are diagnosed with dementia, you can establish a personal care directive that will be honoured once the disease takes over and you are no longer legally considered competent to make the decision.

"If you make the request now when you are fully competent, you are basing your decision on what you feel right now," said Sperry.

"If you get dementia, not only wouldn't you request it but you wouldn't even know that you're living a life you didn't want to live."

Canada more unequal for kids: UNICEF

EQUALITY

Report ranks this country 26th out of 35 nations

Among the world's rich countries, Canada is one of the more unequal societies for children, according to a new UNICEF report on the well-being of young

"In the international Olympics of child well-being, there isn't much to celebrate," UNICEF Canada said in a companion analysis released Thursday.

David Morley, president and CEO of UNICEF Canada, told Torstar News Service "we need to make some investments" because "if we make things better for our poorest children, it makes them better for our society and builds the kind of society we want to think we are."

The global report, UNICEF's Report Card 13: Fairness for Children, focused on what is called "bottom-end inequality" - how far the poorest children are allowed to fall behind the average of their peers.

It looked at the difference in four key areas - income, health, education and life satisfaction between those children at the bottom 10 per cent of family income and those in the middle.

In 2013, Canada ranked 17th out of 29 affluent countries. In KEY FINDINGS

Most areas of child well-being showed no improvement in Canada over the last decade.

The poorest children in Canada have family incomes 53 per cent lower than the average child.

Boys and girls are "differently" unequal, with boys more likely to fall behind in education, girls more likely to fall behind in health and life satisfaction.

this latest study, Canada is 26th out of 35 nations.

"Canada is one of the more unequal societies for children," said the UNICEF Canada report titled Fairness for Children: Canada's Challenge. "The growing gaps suggest that life is becoming more difficult for the most excluded children as social inequality has widened."

Alarmingly, Canada has one of the highest proportions of children reporting very low life satisfaction, which is associated with poor mental health and risky behaviour.

For indigenous and racialized communities, especially, there is a sense of "being beyond the fringe, not even on the fringes," Morley said. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

'Massive value' to eating insects, brothers say

Bugs might be a diet staple in many parts of the world, but the thought of munching on insects is probably enough to make most Canadians squirm.

Yet three brothers think it's time for people in this country to get over their squeamishness and eat the nutrient-rich creatures.

"If you want your relationship with food to be one where the food you eat enhances your life, enhances your wellness and helps you live longer, then you should consider insects. And at the same time they help the planet," says Jarrod Goldin, president of Entomo Farms, which raises crickets and mealworms for human consumption in Ontario.

"If you don't care about living longer and your health and all you want to do is drink pop and eat Doritos, then God bless you, go right ahead. It's not for us to preach or try to convince.

"There is a massive, massive value to eating insects, massive value, for people, for their children, for their families."

Eating insects, known as entomophagy, is a nutritious alternative to other proteins like chicken, pork, beef and even fish.

"As a source of protein, for example, weight for weight, it has twice as much protein as beef," says Goldin.

"It has all nine essential amino acids, again twice the amount of beef. It has about 30 times more B12 in it than beef does."

They emit fewer greenhouse gases and less ammonia than cattle or pigs and need significantly less land and water than cattle rearing, adds Goldin.

A 2013 report, "Edible Insects: Future Prospects for Food and Feed Security" by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, proved inspirational to Goldin and his brothers Darren and Ryan.

By 2050, the world will host nine billion people and current food production will need to almost double, according to the report. Yet land is scarce, oceans are overfished and climate change and related water shortages could have profound implications for food production.

The FAO estimates insects form part of the diet of at least two billion people and thousands of species have reportedly been used as food.

MacLaren's latest gaffe draws ire

Ont. PC member used fake endorsements on website

A Progressive Conservative member of the Ontario legislature was sanctioned by the party's leader on Wednesday after posting fake constituent endorsements on his website and making a sexist joke about a Liberal MP.

Jack MacLaren met with party officials for more than an hour before he emerged to say the phoney endorsements were no longer on his website.

"I apologize. We have removed it from my website and we're sorry it happened," MacLaren said before walking away and declining to answer questions from a crowd of reporters and camera crews following him.

PC Leader Patrick Brown removed MacLaren as the eastern Ontario representative in the PC caucus and gave the job to another Tory member of the legislature, Jim McDonell, but stopped short of removing him from caucus entirely.

A source familiar with the situation said Brown is furious with MacLaren, especially after he made crude remarks about MP Karen McCrimmon at a recent fundraising event near Ottawa.

Just last week Brown had to distance himself from "misogynist comments" that MacLaren made in the form of a sexist joke he told about McCrimmon.

MacLaren wouldn't talk to the media about his off-colour comments, but he did issue an apology to McCrimmon after the story became public.

The uproar over those revelations had barely died down when the Ottawa Citizen reported on the phoney names and photos on MacLaren's site Tuesday night. By Wednesday morning, a disclaimer had been posted on the site admitting the names and pictures of the alleged constituents were not real.

MacLaren, who represents Carleton-Mississippi Mills in eastern Ontario, also sent out an email insisting the fake photographs and names were used to "protect the privacy" of people who provided positive feedback to his office.

MacLaren's website was shut down by Wednesday afternoon. ReEnvision, the company that developed and provides technical support to the website, said it has "no control over the content."

MacLaren was first elected in 2011 after defeating veteran Progressive Conservative Norm Sterling, a 34-year veteran of the Ontario legislature, for the party's nomination.

The negative publicity around MacLaren had some of his Tory caucus colleagues saying they want him gone from the party entirely.

'Affluenza' teen gets nearly 2 years in jail

A judge on Wednesday ordered a Texas teenager who used an "affluenza" defence in a fatal drunken-driving wreck to serve nearly two years in jail, a surprising sanction that far exceeds the several months in jail that prosecutors initially said they would pursue.

Ethan Couch, who was appearing in adult court for the first time after he turned 19 on Monday, received 180 days for each of the four deaths in the June 2013 crash.

Initially, state District Judge Wayne Salvant said he would not immediately rule on how much longer Couch would spend in the Tarrant County jail. But he reconsidered his ruling after hearing an argument from prosecutors that Couch should be sentenced not to 120 days in jail for the crash, but to 180 days for each of four counts of intoxication manslaughter under a separate part of Texas code.

Couch had been facing the prospect of adult jail time as part of his probation once his case had moved out of the juvenile system. Prosecutors didn't ask the judge to declare Couch had violated his juvenile probation by fleeing to Mexico with his mother last year.

Couch lost control of his family's pickup truck after he and his friends had played beer pong and drank beer that some of them had stolen from a Wal-Mart. He veered into a crowd of people helping the driver of a disabled vehicle on the side of the road. Authorities later estimated that he was going 70 mph in a 40 mph zone.

Neural bypass system restores a patient's use of his hand

Ian Burkhart was 19 and fresh out of his first year of university when he dove into a shallow wave on vacation with friends. He hit a sandbar and broke his neck, catastrophically damaging his spinal cord. Doctors told Burkhart he was quadriplegic: he could move his shoulders, but he would most likely never move his hands or legs again.

Three years later, in a laboratory at the University of Ohio, researchers wrapped a neuromuscular electrical stimulation cuff around Burkhart's forearm. The cuff was connected to a "neural bypass" system, which learned to decode signals from sensors in his brain. Burkhart thought about moving his hand, and for the first time since his accident, he moved it.

After 15 months of training with the system, Burkhart can use it to make isolated hand and finger movements and perform functional tasks, like grasping and swiping a credit card. He can even play Gui-

That first hand movement "was really just like that flicker of hope: this is something that's working. I will be able to use my hand again," Burkhart said. Researchers not connected to the study welcomed the advance, but cautioned that it could be years before technology like this might be able to help others. Burkhart underwent brain surgery to implant the microelectrode array, and his skull must be tethered to devices in a laboratory in order for the system to work.

The researchers are now focusing on shrinking the system and making it more intuitive. so Burkhart, and potentially other patients, can use it outside the lab. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Cuba eases grip on wholesale market

ONSUMER GOODS

Some private businesses will get supplies at 20% discount

Cuba says it is opening its statecontrolled wholesale market to a limited number of private business owners in response to rising prices that have angered many ordinary Cubans.

Without access to wholesale goods, private business have been buying basic supplies in retail outlets and raising the prices to generate profit, leading to widespread hikes in the cost of food and many household goods.

State-run media said Wednesday that food and personal-service businesses that are either co-operatively run or rent space from the government will be able to buy goods at prices 20 per cent below retail. They will also be able to do business with state-run importers, a potentially important new benefit that could give access to U.S.-made goods.

The new measures also establish price caps on some goods bought wholesale and sold privately, among them Cuban-produced soft drinks and beer, rum, cigarettes and chicken. State media said the measures would go into effect on May 2.

Under economic reforms that began under President Raul Castro, Cuba has been slowly allowing private enterprise to compete with state-run businesses saddled by decades of inefficiency and lack of investment. IMPORTS

Passengers bring in goods

Private businesses have been unable to import through normal channels, forcing them to depend on informal networks that arrange for Cuban airline passengers to bring hundreds of millions of dollars of goods each year into the country in their checked bags.

Private businesses have been dramatically outperforming government-run enterprises but charge prices out of the reach of most Cubans, leading to bitter complaints that the country's socialist system no longer serves ordinary people.

Cosby wants testimony resealed

Bill Cosby's lawyers urged an appeals court Wednesday to reseal the comedian's lurid, decade-old testimony about his womanizing, but the panel of judges seemed to think the request was pointless, since the deposition has already made headlines around the world.

Members of the three-judge panel of the 3rd U.S. Circuit of Appeals reeled off a list of "the toothpaste's out of the tube"type metaphors to suggest that any damage to Cosby's reputation from the release of the testimony has already been done. The documents were released last year on a request by The Associated Press.

Cosby's attorneys hope a ruling in their favour could help them keep the documents from being used in the criminal case against him in Pennsylvania and in the many lawsuits filed around the country by women who accuse him of sexual assault or defamation.

But the judges questioned that strategy, too, saying the other courts "don't have to necessarily follow us. We can't control them."

Cosby gave the testimony in 2005 as part of a lawsuit brought against him by Andrea Constand, a Temple University employee who said he drugged and molested her at his home. She later settled for an undisclosed sum, and sensitive documents in the file remained sealed.

Spending boost to spur growth: BoC

Central bank projects GDP to expand 1.7%

The Bank of Canada says the federal government's multibillion-dollar spending boost has uplifted what would have been a modest downgrade to its economic growth forecast

The central bank also kept its trend-setting interest rate locked at 0.5 per cent Wednesday.

The bank expects the federal investments of about $25 billion over the next two years to more than offset the negative consequences of a slightly stronger dollar, weaker-thanexpected global growth and shrinking investment in the oil sector.

It is now predicting the country's real gross domestic product to expand by 1.7 per cent in 2016, up from its January expectation of 1.4 per cent.

The bank said unexpectedly strong growth in the first three months of 2016 was partly due to temporary factors and that is expected to fade with the loonie's recent rise and slower international demand.

"The combined effect of all these global and domestic developments would have been a modest downgrade of the bank's outlook," the bank said in a statement that accompanied the latest release of its quarterly monetary policy report.

"However, the fiscal measures announced in the March federal budget will have a notable impact on GDP."

It is now predicting first quarter GDP to register 2.8 per cent, up from one per cent. It's also anticipating one per cent growth in the second quarter of 2016, down from the January forecast of 2.2 per cent.

Using the same baseline numbers in Ottawa's recent budget, it projected federal and provincial government spending to combine to contribute 0.5 percentage points to growth this year and 0.6 percentage points in 2017. The impacts of provincial measures are expected to be minimal.

The Bank of Canada kept its trend-setting interest rate at this number.

But even with the government lift, the bank lowered its 2017 growth projection to 2.3 per cent from 2.4 per cent. That's because non-resource exports, while strengthening, aren't expected to be as robust as previously thought due to the recent increase in the dollar.

Following the announcement, CIBC chief economist Avery Shenfeld wrote in a note that governor Stephen Poloz had no choice but to raise the 2016 forecast since his boss. Finance Minister Bill Morneau, has been "touting the benefits of fiscal stimulus" and because the economy saw surprisingly sturdy GDP growth in December and January. THE CANADIAN PRESS

EMMA TEITEL ON WHO 'THEY' REALLY IS

If it was really vital to a person's mental health that I do my best to call them 'they' (a grammatical leap everyone makes these days anyway), why should I be so stubborn and flippant?

The first time a gender nonconforming person asked me to refer to them as "they" rather than "he or she," I was polite and accommodating, but inwardly, I was a cynical jerk.

The whole plural-as-singular thing, I thought, was precious and pretentious.

Who was this person to insist that I refer to "them" exclusively in the plural as though "they" were some sort of divine spirit?

"They are everywhere."
"They are in your heart." "If you build it, they will come."

In short, "they" as a gender neutral singular pronoun struck me as only slightly less entitled than the royal "we."

And then I got over myself. Or, more specifically, I put myself in their shoes, at which point the pronoun request suddenly seemed quite minor.

After all, if it was really so vital to this person's mental health and sense of self that I do my best to call them "they" (which amounts to a variation on a grammatical leap everyone makes these days anyway), why should I be so stubborn and flippant? In short, who the hell cared?

And what surprised me about my new-found acceptance of the pronoun wasn't the satisfaction I felt at doing "the right thing" but the realization that doing the right thing was actually kind of fun, like learning a new language.

We seldom think deeply about the words that come out of our mouths in casual conversation and having to do so — in this case making a men-

But not everyone, I understand, regards making gymnastic adaptations in their grammar to satisfy gender neutrality as unmitigated fun.

From "They" to "Ze", gender-neutral pronouns are a source of confusion and irritation for millions of people (like my former self) who cannot — scratch that — will not — wrap their heads around a new way of speaking and thinking.

Take the online backlash to a recent piece in the New York Times Magazine by Amanda Hess, "Who's They?" about the history of gender neutral pronouns from 1800s England to HBO's Girls; a reaction summed up neatly in the words of one especially frazzled commenter, Sandra from Montana: "I think I'm too old for this. Are we really going to change a language of a billion people for them?"

Even for otherwise progressive people, the plural-as-singular-pronoun appears to be a kind of last straw.

Gay marriage, why not? Transgender? Caitlyn Jenner looks fantastic!

But seeing one person walk into your house and calling out "Honey, they're home"? Please. How many accommodations must we make?

Once more. Get over it. And yet, it isn't just the ig-

And yet, it isn't just the ignorant and stubborn members of the conventional grammar majority who need to get over themselves and their own reactionary isolation. It's activists too.

If gender neutral pronouns are ever going to transition from the realm of niche identity politics to accepted norm, activists need to move out of their own bunkers to engage the "enemy" too, in civil discourse.

A new study (conducted by political researchers at Stanford University and the University of California, Berkeley) which followed door-to-door canvassers in Florida who were trying to change people's minds about transgender rights, found that contrary to popular opinion, when canvassers engaged honestly and openly with skeptical subjects, they could be convinced to alter their positions.

But there is, unfortunately, very little honest and open engagement online about these issues, where activists regularly shame rather than explain, and where people who aren't hip to the correct terminology are practically excommunicated.

I have said this before and I'm sure I will say it again, because I believe it is a legitimate barrier to practical and meaningful change.

To this charge, proponents of online identity politics have one defiant answer: "It's not our job to educate you!" Really? Then whose job is it?

And what kind of sincere activism becomes petulant every time it encounters a person who misunderstands or opposes its cause?

Can you imagine any other activism in which this type of shutting out and shaming would fly? "You mean you don't understand why assisted suicide is humane? OMG how dare you! I can't even. BYE." (Probably not the canniest of strategies.)

There was a time I sympathized with the rush-to-shame or dismissal position; this was when I first started to receive homophobic letters from readers (which I still do, on a regular basis).

But then I started responding to said letters seriously and honestly and — a la the door canvassers in Florida — I saw a marked difference and new-found openness in the attitudes of the supposedly bigoted people who had written me before.

No, it wasn't "my job" to educate anyone. But I'm glad it occurred to me to try.

ROSEMARY WESTWOOD

On reserves, the state of emergency never actually ends

If 11 suicide attempts in a day in a community of 1,500 people isn't a state of emergency — as declared by Attawapiskat's chief on Saturday — nothing is.

Certainly, alarm at the crisis in the northern Ontario community has been widespread, among indigenous, provincial, and federal leaders, national and international media.

But by their very nature, states of emergency are lastditch efforts for help. They are short-term, flashes-in-the-pan of attention.

Flying in band-aid resources, such as non-permanent counsellors, to handle the fallout is certainly necessary. But everyone knows it offers zero long-term hope.

Indigenous suicide is not like flood waters that will recede. They have not appeared like a freak storm. It's a persistent and devastating phenomenon which must be actively scrubbed from indigenous communities, along with the idea that responding to a state of emergency is in any way sufficient.

It is not. To begin with, an indigenous state of emergency isn't very powerful. For the federal government, a state of emergency frees up power and money to be wielded at the government's whim. For reserves, a state of emergency is a cry for help, from a disempowered group to a powerful one. It doesn't grant a reserve more power or wash it in money.

Nevertheless, states of emergencies have become the crutches of government, the method by which ministers express concern for indigenous lives, the mechanism for meagre resources. The reliance on states of emergency almost presupposes the cyclical nature of various crisis on reserves, the pendulum forever swinging from bad to very bad.

It is particularly vile that states of emergencies on reserves are almost synonymous now with suicide spikes. And yet, suicide is not what states of emergency were designed for - at least according to the government's own documents. While fires and floods and all manner of natural disasters are mentioned in INAC's Emergency Management Plan for states of emergency on reserves, suicide is not. And while the policy rightly gives equal weight to preventing emergencies as to responding to them, we can see how effective suicide prevention has been.

I wish we could recast "states of emergencies" into more accurate language. Like: "spike in suicides higher than the regular, terrible suicide rate stemming from centurieslong discrimination and also a lack of humane, basic services, like water." Or: "state of crisis even more severe than usual, warranting extra media/government attention until it subsides back down to the usual state of crisis."

At least then the hypocrisy would be clear.

INTERVIEW

Biography follows her life long before campaign trail

With another Clinton running for the U.S. presidency, a new release about her life is timely.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, A Woman Living History, by Karen Blumenthal is categorized as a Young Adult book, but like so many YA books is sophisticated, clear and completely suitable for adults.

This Q&A with author Karen Blumenthal reveals just how sophisticated the insights in the biography are.

You quote Mario Cuomo, former governor of New York, who said "You campaign in poetry. You govern in prose." You note Hillary has the prose part down but her campaigning lacks finesse.

I was so excited when I found that quote. It had been used in a different context, to describe Bill Clinton, who is the master of poetry in campaigning, perhaps the best campaigner of my generation. But it spoke to me in terms of Hillary. She is very good at the prose but she has even admitted she isn't a natural campaigner.

Hillary has always realized that about herself. When she became the governor of Arkansas' wife she began to understand that she couldn't do certain things.

That is one of the more revealing sections about her in the book. She gave a speech that is very powerful where Getting schooled on Hillary's history she talks about thinking how they would both go off to work together in the morning. She would go to her law office and he would go to the governor's office.

governor's office. And they would return for dinner and talk about their day, just two professionals in a marriage.

As smart as she is, she had to learn that being a politician's wife is not the same as being a lawyer's wife.

She has so much baggage, not just the stuff that Bill has loaded on her for years, but her own issues: using her personal email for government retary of state, for example.

She certainly does things that seem dumb, for lack of a better word. She does seem to lack savvy. What would you work while she was sec-lack savvy. What would you expect the outcome would be of using your personal email (for work purposes) or of refusing to engage with the press? Those were not accidental choices, those were very intentional choices. Those things have created trust issues that are real.

Hillary has wanted to be president for a very long time. It's interesting that the wife of a former president is running for the same office he held.

She is not just a president's wife. She is a highly competent, highly qualified female politician whose life was really changed by her time in the White House. That was her transformative moment, to go through the Monica Lewinsky scandal as the partner of Bill Clinton.

To me the most interesting moment, and I didn't know about this until I started researching, but six weeks after Bill went public and admitted to the nation and to her that he lied, some Democratic women show up at her office, not to console her or support her, but to tell her they need her to get on the campaign trail because Bill Clinton is not going to help the Democrats through the 1998 (midterm) election.

She goes to help these candidates get elected. Out of that experience she realizes she is not just a first lady, she is a politician in her own right. And after that she becomes senator, she becomes a presidential candidate, she becomes secretary of state. This is a whole different dynamic than we have seen from any first lady.

She does seem to be a magnet for controversy.

One of the reporters who followed her in the New York (Senate) campaign had an interesting observation: "When she answers questions you don't feel you are getting the whole answer." I don't think she thinks she is holding back; I think she does think she is answering. There is a discomfort for people who believe politicians can't be trusted.

I want to go back to your question about what did surprise me researching this book. I didn't expect that I would be covering the history of the last 50 years. Her life has almost been a front row of history.

As a teenager she meets
Martin Luther King in the 1960s; she was at college from 1965 to 1969, at the beginning of the women's movement, the middle of the civil rights movement, the escalation of the war in Vietnam.
She is in New Haven, Conn., (studying law at Yale) when the Black Panthers go on trial there.

She works for the Judiciary Committee looking into the impeachment of Richard Nixon. She is the first lady during the Oklahoma bombing and a New York senator during 9/11. Telling her story is telling the history of America in the last 50 years. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Beyond the role of 'Mexican Hooker #1'

CARMEN AGUIRRE

Author transcends her trauma in new memoir

It seems appropriate to be speaking to Carmen Aguirre while she's out on the road. But her hotel room in London, U.K., where she is in town for a book tour, is a world away from the nomadic childhood she spent on the move after General Augusto Pinochet's brutal 1973 coup forced her family to flee their home in Chile.

Aguirre's first memoir, the best-selling Something Fierce: Memoirs of a Revolutionary Daughter, documented her family's years on the run, followed by her own decision at age 18 to join the underground resistance against Pinochet. In 2012, Something Fierce won CBC's books competition Canada Reads, in what was perhaps its most controversial and heated debate to date, when a panelist, Quebec lawyer Anne-Francis Goldwater, declared Aguirre a "bloody terrorist."

While it's clear from Goldwater's comment that it's difficult for many to empathize with what it must have been like to witness that kind of violence at such a young age, Aguirre's recollections in the book of being a teenager — coveting the cool pair of shoes and wanting to hang out with cute boys — also made her story relatable as a coming-of-age tale.

Sadly, there will be readers who relate to some of the themes and events in her follow-up memoir, Mexican Hooker #1: And My Other Roles Since the Revolution, which details her life after a horrifying attack at age 13 by John Horace Oughton, the serial rapist known as Vancouver's Paper Bag Rapist.

When Aguirre initially set out to write Mexican Hooker #1, published by Random House Canada, she says she wanted to "explore her creative journey" as a performer, playwright and theatre director.

"I had no intention of making the rape the focus of the book,"

I had no intention of making the rape the focus of the book

Carmen Aguirre

she says. But her growth as an artist was in many ways directly connected to the trauma she experienced as a child.

Aguirre knew she wanted to be an actor since she was three years old, after her parents took her to a circus and she became mesmerized by a performer riding on a galloping white horse. It wasn't until years later, at theatre school in Vancouver during an intense acting class, that she had a flashback so powerful the director insisted she enrol in therapy.

After years of work, both personal and professional, Aguirre found strength in the theatre, choosing to develop her own productions rather than being cast in stereotypical roles for Latina women, like Mexican Hooker #1, and as a workshop facilitator, helping others to overcome trauma through dramatic arts.

It seems appropriate that Mexican Hooker #1 also travels back and forth in time, as Aguirre slowly and deliberately lays out the details of her rape and recovery, and finally her astonishing face-to-face confrontation with Oughton more than 30 years later, which she says has left her feeling more compassion for the man most would deem a monster.

And although she didn't write the book as therapy for herself or others, she has already been approached by other victims wanting to share their experiences.

But ultimately, Aguirre says Mexican Hooker #1 is more than just a single story and a reminder that there's much more to this woman than her past as a teenage revolutionary or rape survivor.

Forget love — monogamy came from the health threat of STIs

RESEARCH

Scientists believe pairing up provided benefits

Why did humans become monogamous, apparently rejecting the promiscuity that is natural to most animals?

Was it morality? Religion? Maybe love?

The answer is germs, researchers said Tuesday, arguing that the havoc caused by sexually transmitted diseases (STIs) convinced our ancestors it would be better to mate for life.

A research duo from Canada and Germany observed that STIs flourished among large groups of people living in the villages, towns and cities that arose after prehistoric hunter-gatherers settled down to farm.

Left unchecked, spreading diseases can affect individual fertility and a group's overall reproduction rate. Falling population numbers would force a rethink of sexual behaviour — which in turn gives rise to social mores.

The researchers developed a mathematical model of huntergatherer demographics and likely STI spread among them.

They used it "to show how growing STI disease burden in larger residential group sizes can foster the emergence of socially imposed monogamy in human mating."

In small groups of no more than 30 individuals, with no chance for epidemic spread, STI outbreaks are generally shortlived, the team said.

The reduced risk may explain why small groups, both among early humans and today, are often polygynous (when men have more than one partner).

Socially imposed monogamy in human mating has long been considered an evolutionary puzzle according to researchers.

Socially-imposed human monogamy has long been considered an "evolutionary puzzle," according to the research duo. It requires societies to put in place checks and structures — a police and court system, for example to uphold societal mores.

"Yet, many larger human societies transitioned from polygyny to socially imposed monogamy beginning with the advent of agriculture and larger residential groups," said the paper. That riddle may now be solved. The research showed that our natural environment, with factors such as disease spread, "can strongly influence the development of social norms, and in particular our group-oriented judgements," study author Chris Bauch of the University of Waterloo said.

Even if drugs were to eradicate STIs, humans wouldn't become wildly promiscuous, according to Bauch.

"Modern societies are more complicated ... and there is probably more than one reason that explains socially imposed monogramy.

"I think it is premature to speculate that marriage will disappear ... if we solve the problem of STIs," he added.

Women face gap in health care access

Women are underserved by the health care system in comparison to men, warn officials at the Women's College Hospital (WCH) in Toronto.

Calling this problem "the health gap," WCH president Marilyn Emery says it "significantly impacts women's health and their quality of life."

In their research, WCH identified several gaps in the way women receive health care and treatment. In health care research, women's unique needs are often ignored — they have different risk factors for some diseases and respond differently to some drugs — but until the 1990s there was no requirement to include women in clinical drug trials.

In cardiac health, more women than men die each year from heart disease, yet make up only 35 per cent of patients in cardiovascular research.

Women also receive less effective treatment for mental health and chronic conditions.

"The health gap is a very real threat to the well-being of women everywhere," says Katherine Hay, president of the Women's College Hospital Foundation.

WCH has spearheaded the Women's Cardiovascular Health Initiative — the first comprehensive assessment and lifestyle program for women with heart problems. They also offer the Women's Mental Health Program, which deals with mental health issues unique to women.

"We're reaching out to our partners and colleagues throughout the health sector and asking them to join us in affecting change and to help us close the health gap for women," says Emery.

Kadri and Rielly score six-year deals

Maple Leafs reward key young players

The Maple Leafs showed their faith in two key young players Wednesday, inking forward Nazem Kadri and defenceman Morgan Rielly to six-year deals.

Kadri's deal totals $27 million US over six years for an average annual value of $4.5 million, while Rielly's pact is worth $30 million for an annual cap hit of $5 million.

The pair were due to become restricted free agents on July 1.

Fresh off his first season in Toronto, Leafs general manager Lou Lamoriello said he was impressed by what he saw from the 25-yearold Kadri and 22-year-old Rielly.

Kadri finished as the Leafs' leading scorer, while Rielly set career-bests with nine goals, 27 assists, 36 points and an average of 23-plus minutes per night.

He believed both were capable of climbing even higher in the coming years, faith made evident by long-term deals that lock the pair in until the summer of 2022.

"There's no question they have a level that they haven't reached yet," Lamoriello said on a conference call. "It's going to be up to them to commit to that and do the things that are necessary to get there. And it's up to us to help them do that."

CLAUS ANDERSEN/GETTY IMAGES, MARK BLINCH/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Last summer, following a turbulent season which included a team-imposed suspension for office behaviour, Kadri was signed to a one-year contract, the intent of which was to determine whether he should be part of the team's future.

Kadri answered those questions with a resurgent all-around season, one that saw him grow into a top centre who head coach Mike Babcock matched up against the opposition's first lines.

"I think we've seen a lot of growth from him, and some real strides," team president Brendan Rielly produced 27 even-strength points, and Florida's Aaron Ekblad, and behind only 14 NHL defenders.

Shanahan said.

Rielly quickly became one of Babcock's leaders on defence in only his third NHL season. He led the Leafs in minutes, playing in every situation for Babcock.

Lamoriello says the organization believes Rielly has all-star potential, having already established himself capable of playing big minutes on a top pair.

"He certainly is the key to our defence," Lamoriello said. "He's our leader there."
